

House Bill 4822

I have been researching state of Michigan 3rd grade reading bill 4822. The senator has been voting if they should start the 3rd grade reading bill this year or later. Representative Amanda Price started the house bill 4822 for struggling students. The bill is about if the representative would start holding back 3rd graders if they do not pass the meap test. I believe this bill is fair because the 3rd grader can see what they know the first year then maybe they can get a better or a higher score another year. Also, if they can't handle 3rd grade and they move on to 4th grade and they can't handle it then why would they move on. In 3rd grade if the students are held back then maybe another year would give the students more time to learn how to read. I like that there is a two year limit to help 3rd graders when they are struggling. If the child does not pay attention in class they are going to have to do 3rd grade again to help them do what they are supposed to do. School would not get boring, the child could go to 3rd grade for 2 years if they do not get a good score on the meap test. This is why I believe it is fair for the students that are struggling in school that should get held back in 3rd grade for 2 or 3 years.
